Briefing

People trying to live healthier lives struggle to manage and coordinate training, recovery, and nutrition in one place. Existing health apps are fragmented, focusing majorly on only one area, which often overwhelms beginners or lacks the depth needed by advanced users. Our goal is to design a single, intuitive interface that provides a balanced and simple view across all three domains. By integrating these critical elements and providing appropriate detail for every user level, we aim to deliver a more successful and motivating path to fitness

Scenarios

Plan a Workout Routine

Your name is Sofia Costa, you are 35 years old, you measure 163cm and weigh 57kg, and you've recently decided to take your fitness journey more seriously. To help with that, you want to create an account on the Forma app to make a plan that fits your lifestyle and goals. You're focused on building muscle, but you want to do it in a way that feels natural and enjoyable. You choose exercises like squats and push-ups and even other exercises recommended by the app. You've organized your sessions throughout the week to maintain a balanced routine that aligns with your daily schedule, especially since you work until 5 p.m. every day. Once the plan is set, it becomes part of your dashboard.

Track a Workout

Today you have a workout session you previously planned. After opening the Forma app, you begin your session and start warming up, preparing for the main lifts. The workout begins with bench press and push ups. You take a moment to review the form cues provided and make sure your technique is good. As the session progresses, you keep track of your sets, repetitions and the resting time. Once the workout is complete, you review your performance summary.

Search Healthy Recipes and Track Calories

You enjoy cooking and maintaining a balanced diet so you always use the Forma app to help you find nice recipes. This evening, you're in the mood for something light and nutritious for dinner. You explore healthy recipe ideas and decide on grilled salmon, which seems like a good choice for its simplicity and high protein content. After preparing the meal, you record it in your daily tracker to keep an eye on your calorie intake.
